Abstract
The research entitled “The Study of British Hegemony toward Rhodesian Reflected in Nervous Condition by Tsitsi Dangarembga” discussed British Hegemony taking place in Rhodesia. The country was colonized by England for about more than ten years. During the colonial time, the Rhodesian lived together with the British under the British government. British culture dominated Rhodesian culture. The British culture hegemonized Rhodesian. The aim was to describe the British hegemony and how the Rhodesian responded the hegemony. To attain the aim, the research was held by applying postcolonial theory with historical approach. The research resulted in that the hegemony of the British existed in the Rhodesian life in the form of education and tradition. In education, the Rhodesian attended the British schools such as, Mission School in Rhodesia and school in England. The tradition was realized in language, lifestyle, food, drink, and meal-custom. The Rhodesian practiced the British cultures in dualism. They only practice the cultures in a certain situation, not in all situation.

Key word: hegemony, British culture, Rhodesian culture, dualism
